Co-management

is one of the ways we have to ensure that everybody is involved in the decision making process on how to manage marine and coastal resources.

Together we can!

Marine resources belong to everybody. Fisheries resources are important to our livelihoods. Government has started a Co-management program to ensure that everybody is involved in looking after these important resources.

CORAL TRIANGLE INITIATIVE
ON CORAL REEF, FISHERIES AND FOOD SECURITY

If you would like to get involved in the process talk to friends that are interested and talk to your local leaders and let them know that you and some friend are interested in actively engaging in discussions on how to manage marine resources.

In order to set up a group, you need to have fishermen, men and women involved in coral gleaning and intertidal fishing, local leader, traditional leaders and anybody else in your community that is interested in managing marine resources.

Once you have managed to get together with your informal group and decide that you want to do ahead and help with management, ensure that your community leaders recognize your group and endorse what you would like to do (get involved in managing marine resources), your group can request management guidelines and guidance from Government, National Directorate for Fisheries and Aquaculture to ensure that you have a management system that increases your fish stock and protects the environment.
